THE LORENZANA RANCHOS

In 1800 a dirty little Spanish sailing vessel passed Point Loma and came to anchor off the tiny village of San Diego, which then had about 180 white inhabitants. In addition to a miscellaneous cargo, there were aboard 19 children who had been gathered from orphan asylums in Mexico, and sent to Alta California to be raised by the kindly people of Mexico's farthest northern settlements. There were nine boys under 10 years of age and ten girls slightly older. The journey up the coast had been a long hard one, during which several of the children sickened and died. When the little ship sailed on to Santa Barbara and Monterey, eight of the youngsters were left with foster parents in San Diego. Aside from the fact that they soon became an integral part of the pueblo's life, and eventually married and raised large families whose descendants still live in California, little is known of these children. Only one of them gained any prominence.

She was Apolinaria Lorenzana—

the surname being that of the Arch Bishop of Mexico, since it was the custom for waifs from foundling homes to assume the Bishop's name when sent out for adoption. She never married, but spent her lifetime working to make the lives of others brighter and happier. Helping care for the sick, assisting the priests in church work, acting as God Mother for many children, she was known as "La Beata"—a title given to one who devoted her life to works of charity and religion; she was not a Nun. She is remembered as a person of strong, somewhat domineering character, moving in the best society and ruling the Indians imperiously. Much of her life was spent in San Diego County, but she was well known throughout the Southland, and she passed away at a venerable age in Santa Barbara.

One reason her name has been perpetuated in San Diego history is the fact that she received grants to two ranchos, Jamacha and Los Coches.

The Lorenzana's

by Thomas Workman Temple II

The 1844 Padron of the Pueblo lists two of the Lorenzana orphans, Vincente (734), and Valeriana (735), and a word about their coming to Alta California, youngsters of Spaniards, mestizos, and Indian ancestry from the orphanages of the Kingdom of New Spain. The express purpose was "para el fomento de las artes, agricultura y poblacion", ie--for the improvement of the cultural arts, agriculture, and shall we say "breed", in this thirty year old province, crying for such new blood to invigorate its growing body.

The Royal Orphanage at Puebla was to furnish twenty carefully screened boys and girls for the venture. The youngsters however got wind of the plan, jumped over the walls of the orphanage and haven't been heard of since. The remaining orphans at Puebla were either too young or not otherwise qualified to come to the rescue of California, ripe for improvement, after the mysterious disappearance of the so carefully screened "elect".

The Orphanage of Mexico City, found by the famed Archbishop Lorenzana, one of the signatories to Visitador General Galvez plan of 1767 for Provincias Internas, was next called upon to furnish ten boys, and ten girls for the project. They were carefully chosen, and although, (according to a charming letter written by the oldest of the girls) their preference was to "enter the religious life rather than to lose their souls in the wilds of California". the forlorn group was unceremoniously snatched off to distant San Blas in special wagons under the watchful eyes of chaperones, with a special military escort.

There followed an interminable wait at the port for a ship. During this time, the Duena (lady chaperone) quite fed up with the mischievous machinations of her charges, including her daughter, Apolinario Lorenzana, reluctantly agreed to continue the journey, only after a considerable increase in her wages and rations. And speaking of the latter, the youngsters ate off the fat of the land at the expense of the King. Judging from the lengthy lists of victuals and desserts, eagerly presented by the San Blas merchants, they were thankful for the windfall of hungry and restless juveniles who feasted on such delicacies as shrimp, squabs, roast lamb, and good flour tortillas.

Finally the good ship La Concepcion, with a novel cargo of boisterous children, warped out of port, bound for far off Monterey. At the provincial capital in 1800, the Lorenzana orphans none the worse for wear, were distributed amongst the more prosperous "gente de razon", "Como perritos entre las familias" (like puppies amongst the families) as Apolinaria Lorenzana, who became the most noted of the arrivals, says in her memoriars, The sponsor or foster-parents became responsible for the education and upbringing of their wards, up to the time of their majority or their marriage.

As already mentioned in our 1844 (Padron) enumeration at the Puebla de Los Angeles, we find two of the Lorenzana orphans Vincente (734) and Valeriana (735) already over forty years in the province, with children and grandchildren.

Vicente Lorenzana had been entrusted to the veteran of 1769, Don Mariano de la Luz Verdugo, and had married a relative of his foster-father Maria Ana Verdugo y Buelna in 1821 at Mission San Gabriel. In 1845 and a widower, he next married Maria del Pilar Tapia a granddaughter of Don Mariano de la Luz, thus remaining in the family.

Dona Valeriana Lorenzana (735) born as "Espanola" in Mexico City was raised in the household of Don Jose de la Guerra y Noriega, until 1807 when she married at San Diego Presido Chapel, Desiderio Ybarra y Velasquez. As Lieutenant and keeper of Company Accounts at the Royal Presidio, Don Jose witnessed his wards marriage along with Ensign Don Ygnacio Martinez, also a native of New Spain. My "Compadre", Clarence Palomares Vejar y Guerra Lorenzana de Alvarado, is of the fifth generation from Dona Valeriana Lorenzana, who as a "muchacha" of thirteen, left her foundling home to establish her own hearthstones, to found her own family in the "wilds of Alta California", one hundred and sixty-one years ago as I write these notes. (1961)

Other Lorenzana decedents were living in the Pueblo in 1844. In 1809 at Mission Santa Barbara, Joaquin Botiller y Cota had married Tadea Lorenzana of La Casa de Cuna de Mexico,--as the foundling hospital was called. She and Jacinto Lorenzana had been entrusted to Don Ygnacio Rodriquez of Santa Barbara in the distribution of 1800. The foster-parents own daughter, Maria del Carmen Roeququez had married Jacinto in 1810. (Error - their marriage was on December 16, 1812) H.T.C.

Dona Tadea Lorenzana's daughter Rita Botiller (742) had married Domingo Reyes y Machado in 1831 and as a widow, next married Macedonio Aquilar y Machado, five years later. Guadalupe Reyes y Botiller married Ramon Figueroa and it was at their home in the 1930's, that Dona Ana Begue Alanis Olivera y Reyes de Packman, our Secretary Emeritus, long held forth with true California hospitality and charm amid an atmosphere redolent of the gracious customs of a vanished day. She is almost "my pariente", for she and Rafael Cota y Olivera de Temple had an ancestor in common; none other than Jose Raimundo Carrillo's own aunt, Dona Maria Micaela Carrillo, wife of Don Martin Olivera, the "funador" of that family in both of the Californias.

Vincente Botiller (750) son of Dona Tadea Lorenzana in 1837 had married Juana Reyes y Machnado, sister of his brother-in-law Domingo Reyes y Machado. There were a "baker's dozen" - thirteen children born of this marriage, ten of them surviving Don Vicente's death in 1863, and heirs to a handsom estate in Pueblo property. Among those today who carry on the Spanish bloodline of Dona Tadea Lorenzana and her Botiller children is Clemente Botiller-Olivera Gagliano of Los Angeles, an eager student of pueblo days and it's involved land transactions, many of them dealing with his own family.

Another son of Dona Tadea Lorenzana de Botiller's who does not appear in the 1844 Padron, and was the first husband of Dona Maria de Jesus Yorba y Dominquez, Anastacio Botiller y Lorenzana. This union readily brings to mind la Senora de Don Arnulfo Dominquez, Dona Clara Botiller y Yorba de Dominquez of Anaheim. Like the dwindling number of outstanding representatives of the grace and charm of our colonial past, she too has passed on to her children and grandchildren, the rich and cherished customs and traditions that form a proud heritage from the days of Lorenzana's and our first families, to whom they became allied.

Thus the Lorenzana foundlings of 1800 are well represented to this day. They have more than justified Viceroy Branciforte's fondest dreams of 1799 "para el fomento de las artes, agricultura, y Poblacion de California". This is evidenced by the lasting contributions to the folklore, traditions, and collecting and preserving of copies of Colonial records by such of the Lorenzana descendants that come to mind; Clarence Palomares, his niece Hilda Ramirez y Palomares de Jara, Clemente Gagliano, and Arnold Dominquez y Botiller.

The saga of the Lorenzana foundlings "funadores", merits more than a passingnote and I hope to report in detail soon, for a whole volume of documents in the Archive General de Indias is devoted to their recruital, supply, maintenance, travel, and final report of Comandante Don Jose Raimundo Carrillo in 1803, listing their distribution and place of residence at that time.

SOME NOTES ON THE COLONIAL SPANISH FAMILY OF YEARRA, OF ALTA CALIF.

Compiled by Thomas Workman Temple II, for June Smith of Lakewood, California, a present day descendant in the generation.

Founders of the YEARRA FAMILY in Alta California were Don JUAN ANTONIO YBARRA and his wife, Dona MARIA DELOS ANGELES VELASQUEZ, both native of Mazatlan, in the Province of Sinaloa, New Spain, as Mexico was called in Spanish Colonial times.

Don Juan Antonio was born in 1760 and married some 18 years later. He enlisted for service in Alta California on June 8, 1780 at La Villa de Sinaloa before one of the officers helping in the recruital of Capt. Dn. Fernando de Rivera y Moncada. This recruital was not only for soldiers and their families for the Presidios of Alta California, but also "Pobladores"-settlers for the proposed Pueblo de Los Angeles. Dona Maria delos Angeles Velasquez was also born in 1760, and a son JOSE ALVINO YEARRA, had been born to her about 1779 in Sinaloa.

The Ybarras joined other soldiers and families at el Real delos Alamos, Sonora, the rendezvous of the expedition, which was then separated into two groups. One was to go north from Los Alamos to the Yuma settlements and then to San Gabriel Mission; the other came down to Guaymas, crossed the Gulf of California to Loreto, Baja California, thence by water to the Bay of San Luis Gonzaga, and overland to San Diego and San Gabriel. The Ybarras came with the group escorting the Poblaáres, via Guaymas, to San Diego.

Don Juan Antonio Ybarra enlisted in the Royal Presidio of San Diego on Aug. 8, 1781, shortly after this part of the expedition reached there. He served in that garrison until 1788 when he was sent as a soldier of the Guard to Mission San Juan Capistrano where his son Andres Dolores was born, returning to the San Diego Presidio in 1791. The family moved to El Pueblo de Los Angeles by 1804, after Don Juan Antonio's retirement from army life.

Don Juan Antonio died at the Pueblo de Los Angeles on Sept. 26, 1812 and was buried the next day in the Cemetery of Mission San Gabriel. His widow Dona Maria delos Angeles Velasquez also died at the Pueblo, on Oct. 21, 1819

LOS POBLADORES
The Founders of the City of Los Angeles

El Pueblo de la Reina de Los Angeles sobre El Río de la Porciúncula was founded on or about September 4, 1781 as the first Spanish civilian settlement in Southern California. Eleven families, including twenty-two adults and twenty-two children, were recruited from the Provinces of Sinaloa and Sonora in New Spain, now called Mexico, by Captain Fernando de Rivera y Moncada, emissary of the Governor of California Felipe de Neve. Their task was to provide food for the soldiers of the presidios and to help secure Spain's hold on this region. They included farmers, artisans, and stock raisers necessary for the survival of the settlement. Escorted by soldiers they departed from Los Alamos, Sonora on February 2, 1781 and arrived in several groups in the summer of 1781. The pobladores ranged in age from one to sixty-seven, and reflected the cultural heritage and racial diversity that link the City's past to the present. The following list of the eleven families was taken from the official Spanish census of 1781 which recorded their names, race, sex and age:
